

Ask Permission To Dam Brown Slough

SEATTLE, June 22—(U.P.)—Three Skagit county dike districts and a drainage district have asked permission of the army engineers to build a dike across Brown's slough, a quarter-mile from the north fork of the Skagit river.

The army engineers here have asked for navigation objections to the plan.

(Brown's slough is one of a number of waterways across the Skagit river delta. The proposed dike and dam across the slough would be located a short distance south of the North Fork bridge, just off the LaConner-Conway road. There are at present dikes on either side of the slough. It is proposed to connect these and prevent flow of flood water through the slough.)